Semtech Response to Maxim Patent Claim

CAMARILLO, Calif.--Aug. 9, 2002--Semtech Corporation (Nasdaq:SMTC) today responded to Maxim Integrated Products' recent announcement of patent infringement litigation against the Company. Semtech firmly believes that the SC1402, the device in question, does not infringe any of Maxim's patents. Furthermore, Semtech believes the Maxim patents to be invalid. In fact, Semtech has been issued its own patent on technology used in this part.

While sales of this one device are not material to Semtech's financial results, Semtech intends to vigorously defend all of its products and intellectual properties, and continues to supply the market with innovative, high quality products.

About Semtech

Semtech Corporation is a leading supplier of analog and mixed-signal semiconductors used in a wide range of computer, industrial and communication applications. Publicly traded since 1967, Semtech is listed on the Nasdaq National Market under the symbol SMTC.
