Shifting to our business, in what must be considered a good omen for our proposed merger, Dirk Nowitski, the most well known (and maybe only) German in the U.S. professional basketball league, led his team to the championship. Maybe it was just a coincidence, but have a look at all the progress made on our merger in June:

The primary objective this month was to spend time with shareholders ahead of the NYX vote on July 7th and the DB tender deadline on July 13th. This month alone, Larry, Mike and I collectively touched over 100 of NYX's top shareholders in New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Baltimore, California and London. I also spent considerable time with Deutsche Boerse shareholders, spoke at DB's Investor Day in Frankfurt and presented jointly with Reto at the Sandler O'Neill conference in New York. The tone in most of these meetings was very positive, as most shareholders understand what we are trying to do and why it is compelling.

Early in the month, the boards of NYSE Euronext and Deutsche Boerse voted to recommend that the newly combined company pay a one-time special dividend of €2.00 per share shortly after closing of the combination. This showed that we will continue to be a shareholder-friendly company that focuses on creating value for our investors. Last week, we announced that proxy firms ISS and Glass Lewis recommend that NYSE Euronext shareholders vote "FOR" the proposed combination. We encourage all employees who own shares of NYX to attend the meeting, either in person or via the Internet (at www.virtualshareholdermeeting.com/nyxspecial).

The regulatory process is also moving along. On Wednesday of this week, we formally filed with the European Commission's Directorate-General for Competition, thereby triggering the official start of the review process in Europe, and yesterday, Reto and I, along with some of our colleagues, met with the College of Regulators in Lisbon to review the status of the merger plans.

Also this month, the full executive teams from both companies met in person for the first time for a very productive offsite in London. We discussed: the convergence of our strategies in the new company, our dialogue with shareholders, and our progress with the regulators and with regard to the integration process. The integration teams, led by Andrew Brandman from NYSE Euronext and Jens Hachmeister from Deutsche Boerse, have been spending a lot of time together preparing for the closing and the subsequent post-merger-integration phase.

Beyond that relatively small group focusing on integration planning, the number one task for the rest of us is to remain focused on business as usual. The month of June provided a litany of evidence that we are staying focused on the business at hand while also pushing the merger forward, but before I move on to that, one more observation on our industry.

As you probably saw, earlier this week the LSE and TMX announced that they are terminating their planned combination. In my mind, this announcement underscores two things: 1) how truly difficult it is to get deals done in our industry and 2) the importance of strategically compelling deal logic. The good news for us is that we have already done one highly successful transatlantic merger and our plans with Deutsche Boerse remain on track. Furthermore, our proposal to create the premier global exchange group with DB has a tremendous amount of strategic deal logic, which the shareholders of both companies seem to recognize.
