COHEN & STEERS REIT AND PREFERRED INCOME FUND, INC.

April 21, 2004

To Our Shareholders:

We are pleased to submit to you our report for the quarter ended March 31, 2004. The net asset value at that date was $29.09 per share. During the quarter, three $0.17 per share monthly dividends were paid. In addition, on March 2, 2004, the fund announced a 2.9% increase in the dividend rate and declared its next three monthly dividends of $0.175 per share, payable on April 30, 2004, May 28, 2004 and June 30, 2004.

INVESTMENT REVIEW

For the quarter, Cohen & Steers REIT and Preferred Income Fund had a total return, based on income and change in net asset value, of 11.1%. This compares with the NAREIT Equity REIT Index's total return of 12.0% and the Merrill Lynch Preferred Fixed Rate Index's total return of 2.8%.

The overall equity market was generally choppy during the first quarter as the broad market averages showed little change. Meanwhile, interest rates continued to remain extremely low, and disappointing payroll reports in both January and February led to strong fixed income performance. This environment remained very favorable for both REITs and preferreds, as investors continued to appreciate the potential for both asset classes to provide high current income and portfolio diversification.

Following the quarter-end, however, bond and stock markets had a decidedly negative response to the strong March jobs report. REITs were especially hard-hit in response to the jobs report (as more fully discussed in the 'Investment Outlook' section below), while corporate preferreds fared much better (although their returns were also negative). One of the key distinguishing characteristics of the fund is that while both asset classes offer the potential for attractive current income, REITs and preferreds are not highly correlated with each other, and, in our view, preferreds may therefore have a steadying effect on the portfolio in times of falling REIT share prices. As a result of their recent price pullback, we believe that REIT valuations, considering improving economic growth prospects, are more attractive now than at any time over the past several months. We have therefore positioned the portfolio to have a greater allocation to REIT common stocks than corporate preferreds (57% vs. 43%, respectively, as of March 31, 2004).

Approximately two and a half years into an economic recovery, we believe the impact is being felt broadly across the income-producing property markets in many parts of the United States as demand for space is increasing and rents are stabilizing. In our view, the resultant acceleration in REIT cash flow growth rates is what has been driving stock prices since last year. After a modest earnings decline in 2003, our forecast is for earnings growth to accelerate to mid-single digit growth this year and high single digit growth next year.

The impact of an improving economy has been felt in credit markets as well. Several quarters of strong profitability and a broad-based de-leveraging of balance sheets in 2003 have stabilized credit markets and contributed to a significant reduction in credit spreads (the risk of owning a preferred or corporate bond),

including in preferreds. Credit spread compression continued in the first quarter, supporting solid performance of preferreds and corporate bonds. Although it may take awhile, we expect the next phase of the credit cycle to be driven by rising 'top line' pricing power as economic strength begins to be felt more broadly. We believe this will continue to bolster fundamentals and lead to modestly tighter spreads in more economically sensitive sectors -- in particular in industrials and basic goods producers. However, it may also lead to a new leveraging process -- incremental borrowings for organic growth and higher M&A activity -- as the year progresses and into 2005. Hence, we look for fundamentals to continue to improve, but also expect more moderate credit spread gains as prospects for a greater level of corporate borrowing begin to be priced into the credit markets.

Within the REIT portion of the portfolio, the fund's best performing investments during the quarter were in the regional mall (23.1% total return) and industrial (19.1%) sectors, while the worst performing sector for the fund was the apartment sector (6.6% total return). Ventas Inc., continuing where it left off from last year, was the fund's best performing stock, contributing a total return of 26.5% during the quarter. Other standouts included regional mall owners and operators Glimcher Realty Trust, Macerich Company and Mills Corp., all of which provided total returns in excess of 20%. Laggards during the quarter were Equity Office Properties, Camden Property Trust and Ramco-Gershenson Property Trust, each of which had a total return of less than 3%.

The fund's preferred and corporate bond holdings performed very well in the first quarter, with particularly good relative performance in many of the institutional preferred holdings. Our higher quality foreign bank preferreds were standout price performers, and we believe that these issues continue to offer good relative value. In addition to strong fundamentals, we believe that the income paid by many of these securities may qualify for the new 15% tax rate on dividends for individuals. While resolution of this issue remains subject to an IRS ruling, we believe that taxable investors have begun to embrace this potential. Many insurance company issues also performed well amid a continuation of the favorable product pricing in this segment, which has led to much-improved earnings and financial strength. Preferreds issued by small banks did well as net interest margins began to expand again following a long period of contraction and as credit losses continued to drop. Lower credit costs also led to good finance company preferred performance. The biggest laggards over the quarter were our automotive holdings, but these have outperformed since the end of the quarter as the major auto manufacturers released very strong earnings reports.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK

As discussed, a very strong March increase in U.S. nonfarm payrolls was announced on April 2, 2004, well in excess of consensus expectations (308,000 new jobs created versus an expectation of 120,000). The bond and stock markets reacted negatively to the news due to concerns that the Federal Reserve would raise interest rates. REIT stock prices declined following the release of the jobs report as investors took profits from a group of stocks that had appreciated without interruption for the past 14 months. While REITs have demonstrated little correlation with interest rates over longer periods of time, it appears that in the short-term, the extreme bond market activity has negatively impacted REIT prices. Most of the fund's preferred and bond holdings also fell in price, but to a much more limited degree than the REIT decline.

We continue to maintain a positive outlook for the U.S. economy. At this time, in our opinion, all the pre-conditions for strong job growth are in place. Corporate profits have staged a dramatic recovery and are at an all-time high as a percentage of GDP. Therefore, it is increasingly profitable for firms to hire the next incremental worker. The recently reported declines in weekly initial jobless claims to three-year lows and the spike in the monthly change in nonfarm payrolls to the highest levels in four years have finally begun to demonstrate that this is occurring. Bond yields have increased significantly since the end of the quarter, and it is possible that higher rates could lie ahead. We have taken a number of steps to address the prospect of higher interest rates within the portfolio in terms of asset weight and security selection.

We have discretion to allocate the fund's portfolio to as much as 60% in preferred stocks and as little as 40%. We expect to maintain a fixed income weight at the low end of that range, as REITs now appear to be more attractively valued than preferreds, in our view. Our fixed income holdings mostly bear relatively higher coupons, as such higher coupon securities historically have fared better in periods of rising interest rates. Specifically, the weighted-average coupon rate on the fund's fixed income holdings is 7.85%, which is well above the 7.08% weighted-average on the Merrill Lynch Fixed-Rate Preferred Index. Higher coupon instruments generally have been more defensive in past rising rate environments for a number of reasons, including the fact that more of the total return of the instrument is derived from 'clipping coupons' and reinvesting. In addition, we have added some floating-rate securities at the margin, which we believe would benefit from rising rates.

With respect to our outlook for REITs, we believe that a normal cyclical economic recovery is in the process of unfolding and the supply/demand dynamic in most real estate markets is turning more positive. Though not widely understood, we believe that job growth has actually been occurring for some time. Many of the companies that we invest in are on the front lines of the consumer and corporate economy. A number of the office and apartment companies that we speak with have observed improved leasing activity for their portfolios that would contradict the virtually nonexistent rate of job growth implied by the official government statistics until recently. As a result of the historically low interest rate environment of the last few years, many REITs were able to improve their balance sheets in a way that gives these companies better potential for an attractive spread between property yields and their blended cost of capital. As a result, our forecast is that cash flow growth rates for REITs should begin to accelerate in 2004 after declining in 2003.

With earnings visibility improving, our forecast is for a resumption of meaningful dividend increases in the next year or two. This is an important factor to consider when assessing how REITs react to rising interest rates. Unlike fixed income securities, REITs have the potential to increase their dividends as the economy expands and companies see their earnings increase, which can help to offset rising rates. During the last economic expansion, for example (the period from 1992 through 2001), REITs increased their dividends on average by about 7% per year. This again represents an important characteristic of the fund. While the fund's main objective is to deliver high current income, the REIT common stock holdings offer the potential for dividend growth over time, unlike funds that invest only in fixed income securities.

As a result of the recent pullback, REITs are now back to trading closely in line with their underlying net asset values. We therefore believe REIT valuations are now more attractive than at any time over the past several months. While market activity could continue to be choppy over the near term, we believe that REIT fundamentals are poised to continue to improve, which should be positive for dividends and share prices over the intermediate and longer term. The same positive forces that are contributing to a better outlook for REIT fundamentals (i.e., an improving economy) should also be positive for the fundamentals of many of our preferred holdings. In our view, this environment should lead to improving credit characteristics of the fund's preferred holdings and earnings growth of the fund's REIT holdings, which potentially could enhance the dividend-paying ability of these companies and lead to further dividend increases over time. We believe the fund is well positioned to deliver attractive current income, and that the balance of REITs and corporate preferreds will help to temper the cycle of each individual asset class.

Sincerely,

MARTIN COHEN

OUR LEVERAGE STRATEGY

The bond market reacted to the strong March jobs report released on April 2nd by turning in its worst single day in 20 years, with the yield on the 10-year Treasury bond increasing from 3.9% to 4.2%. While we do not attempt to predict what future interest rates will be, it has been our philosophy to utilize interest rate swap transactions to seek to reduce the interest rate risk inherent in our utilization of leverage. In this period of significant interest rate volatility, and with the possibility that interest rates could trend higher in the near term, we want to take the opportunity to review our leverage strategy.

Our leverage strategy involves issuing auction market preferred stock (AMPS) to raise additional capital for the fund, with an objective of increasing the net income available for shareholders. As of March 31, 2004, AMPS represented 32% of the fund's total capital. Considering that AMPS have variable dividend rates, we seek to lock in the rate on a majority of this additional capital through interest rate swap agreements (where we effectively convert our variable rate obligation to a fixed rate obligation for the term of the swap agreements). Specifically, we have fixed the rate on 68% of our leverage at an average interest rate of 3.7%, for an average remaining period of 4.7 years (when we first entered into the swaps, the average term was 5.3 years). By locking in a large portion of our leveraging costs, we have endeavored to adequately protect the dividend-paying ability of the fund, which is one of the reasons the fund was recently able to increase its monthly dividend. The use of leverage increases the volatility of the fund's net asset value in both up and down markets. However, we believe that locking in a portion of the fund's leveraging costs for the term of the swap agreements partially protects the fund from any impact that an increase in short-term interest rates may have as a result of the use of leverage. The swap contracts also provide a modest NAV cushion, as they are assets of the fund that are marked-to-market daily and will rise in value in a rising rate environment.
