Item 8.01 Other Events

On March 12, 2008, Handleman Company (Handleman) hosted an Investor Earnings Call (Earnings Call). The Earnings Call followed a press release announcing Handleman s third quarter results and amendment to its credit agreements.

During the Earnings Call, a participant asked, in substance, if Handleman would have applied its excess cash year-over-year, or January over April last year to its outstanding debt would Handleman have breached the affirmative covenant requiring that its collateral assets remain sufficient to support its outstanding debt. Handleman s response of yes was inconsistent with its then existing credit agreements. Specifically, the credit agreements did not define cash as collateral. Therefore, had Handleman used its excess cash to pay down its outstanding debt, Handleman s collateral assets would not have been sufficient to support its outstanding debt and Handleman would have been in breach of the affirmative covenant. If the credit agreements had defined cash as collateral, then Handleman would not have triggered an event of default.
