To LSI and Agere Employees,

In my communication on January 3rd, I explained the go-forward principles and leadership structure that will take effect the day after our official close. I am pleased to say that everything is progressing on schedule in preparation for our close, which is targeted for shortly after the votes take place on March 29th by our respective shareholders. Today, I want to offer insight on some additional organizational decisions that have been made. I am pleased to communicate that we have arrived at an optimal post-merge sales structure to be implemented for the combined company based on the following tenets:

- Maintaining momentum on current business and design win activities

- Minimizing change for our customers and preventing disruptions to what is working in our major accounts

- Fostering consistency and best practices where it matters across the sales discipline

- Enabling cross selling into our larger customers and creating opportunities to drive new growth for the company

Although our organization structures differ in reporting, with LSI's centralized organization reporting into me while Agere's is integrated into the separate business units, we are similar in having dedicated and focused sales forces for specific markets and customers. Both structures have proven to be successful. However, the scope of the new company as well as the customer concentration in some of the businesses warrant a hybrid approach to achieve our key tenets. We will organize the sales structure in two distinct organizations focused on specific markets and the customers that serve those markets. These organizations, which will report to me directly, are described below:

Server and Storage Customer Sales: This group will be led by Flavio Santoni, who has been leading LSI's silicon to systems to software sales and marketing strategy in these segments. His role will be to continue the positive momentum that has been generated and drive greater sales leverage and penetration in the accounts, as well as continue to grow LSI's data management software business. Products distributed to this customer base are primarily standard storage components, storage systems, and data services software. The customer base for this segment includes the major Tier-1 server vendors, such as Dell, HP, IBM and Sun, as well as the Tier 2 server and storage vendors and the reseller channel. The sales teams reporting to Flavio, in addition to the marketing and support functions, will be:

OEM Sales Dave Mooney

International Field Operations Scott Brooks

Americas Field Operations Mike Reilly

Data Management Software Sales Mark Spowart

Networking, Storage Peripheral, & Consumer Customer Sales: This group will drive much of the new LSI's semiconductor sales effort encompassing customers servicing the Enterprise Networking, Telecom, Mobility, Consumer, and Storage Peripherals market segments. I am delighted to announce that Jeff Hoogenboom will join LSI effective today to co-lead the sales integration process and the go-forward organization at close. Jeff joins LSI after a lengthy career at Intel spanning manufacturing, marketing and sales including managing everything from multi-billion dollar multinational accounts, to running Intel's channel business, to most recently running Intel's Embedded and Communications sales force. Jeff will be managing five distinct sales teams focused on customers in the noted segments. While the Enterprise, Telecom and Consumer sales teams will be reporting to Jeff on a solid-line basis, the sales structure for Mobility and Storage Peripherals will report to him on a dotted-line basis. Due to the highly concentrated customer base and custom nature of Mobility and Storage Peripherals, it is critical we maintain the momentum and focus of the current structures including multi-disciplinary functions, such as application engineering, customer marketing, customer program management, and business operations in addition to sales. The major sales teams reporting to Jeff will be:

Storage Peripheral Sales (dotted line) Jim Bland

Consumer Sales Dave Long

Telecom and Service Provider Sales Keith Pruden

Mobility Sales (dotted line) Tomas Nicklasson

Enterprise Networking Sales John Kitajima

Flavio and Jeff will proceed quickly to establish a sales integration team to begin planning for a seamless transition at the time of close. This team will also determine the best approach to our sales structure in the geographies while also driving consistency and best practices across the aggregate sales force. You should see more detail on their respective staffs and sales structures, including plans for how we will structure the geographies, in the next several weeks.

After thoughtful analysis, the go-forward leadership team has decided to centralize the development of Foundational R&D. Foundational R&D encompasses the design platform including design methodology and development of common IP used across all silicon business units. Centralizing this capability will create unprecedented R&D scale and enable us to create industry leading technology platforms. The centralized function of Foundational R&D will be hosted for the company by NSPG and led by Sudhakar Sabada. Sudhakar will immediately start working with the silicon R&D leadership team to drive the specific integration plan for this function. More detail on the composition of this organization and its scope will be communicated in the near future.

To wrap up, I am pleased with the progress both companies have been making toward meeting our integration planning goals. I anticipate the next level or two of the organization being announced within the next 1-2 weeks to enable further progress as we approach our formal close. Until then it remains critical that we operate as two independent companies while maintaining focus on our respective customers, product commitments, and deliverables.

Thanks,

Abhi
