NOMURA SAYS CZECH LEGAL ACTION TOTALLY UNFOUNDED

Nomura said today:

The action announced today by the Czech Republic is completely without foundation. This frivolous damage claim, which greatly exceeds IPB's entire asset size, suggests that the Czech Republic is seeking to make Nomura the scapegoat not only for IPB's failure, but also for the Czech Republic's mismanagement of its entire banking system. This legal action recycles allegations that have already been made by the Czech Republic through CSOB, which was given IPB by the Government for free. Similar allegations have been dismissed in Dutch court and in other legal proceedings, and Nomura is confident that they will be dismissed again.

The timing of this claim is no coincidence. The Czech Republic must file its defence to Nomura's treaty claim early next year. Last month the European Commission announced that it will be investigating illegal subsidies to the Czech banking sector.

The actions stem from the forced administration of IPB in 2000, in which Nomura was an investor. IPB's failure was caused by the Czech Republic's distribution in a 2-year period of subsidies exceeding 20% of GDP to IPB's three competitors. The subsidies were granted without measures to avoid distortions to competition in violation of the Czech Republic's obligations to the European Union. On the weekend following forced administration, IPB's business was sold to its competitor, CSOB, with unlimited government guaranties, on terms that a Parliamentary investigation subsequently described as a gift.

In October 2000 Nomura brought an action against the Czech Republic under the Dutch-Czech investor protection treaty for unfair and discriminatory treatment seeking CZK 30.5 billion in damages.
